

LORD GORDON-GORDON.

A Nobleman Who Duped America's Sharpest Railroad Kings.

[W. A. Croft in New York World.]

Do you remember Lord Gordon-Gordon, heir of the noble house of Scotland, cousin of the Campbells, and descendant of "old Lochinvar"? He was a low-bred knave. In Scotland he had been often "wanted" by the sheriff, but he finally stole $100,000 worth of diamonds in Edinburgh, and six months later, in 1883, he is reported to be in St. Paul, Minn., as Lord Gordon-Gordon. He had $100,000 in the local bank. He presented forged letters of introduction to a few, and became the lion of the town. He won the entire confidence of John S. Loomis, land commissioner of the Northern Pacific railroad, and entered into contracts to buy several million acres of the country's land. He would go and pick it out, he said.

Loomis organized a gorgeous excursion for him, something like the excursion that Apollodorus planned for Cleopatra. During three months of summer the importer traveled, feasted and hunted through Minnesota and Dakota in the style of a king, at the expense of the Northern Pacific railroad. Thirty or forty strong men served him in his retinue. Nothing was too good for him. He had two palatial tents of his own, and there, on silver and the most lovely china, were served to him such viands as would have surprised Sam Ward or Epicurus. Fruits were brought from Mexico for him, curacao from St. Lucia island, Dry Monopoles from its fragrant home. His table was like Montezuma's. Loomis spent $45,000 on him that summer, and he was the director. "He's the richest lord in Europe. He will invest millions with us." Finally the splendid cavalcade wound its way back to St. Paul. He must "run down to New York a few days," he said, and he came and installed himself at the Fifth Avenue hotel.

Just how this Scotch Monte Cristo made Jay Gould's acquaintance I am not certain; but the great financier called on him one bright morning. He was dressed in the picturesque conventional powers, and immediately took stock in a "wonderful scheme" which he unfolded—something about a steamship company, I think. Incredibly it seems, Jay Gould went down to his office and sent up to Lord Gordon-Gordon at the Fifth Avenue hotel three trunks full of greenbacks—no less than $150,000 in all—sent to the noble stranger without security. The X. B. packed it off by Canada, and followed it himself on the next train.

Jay Gould had been badly duped. He offered a reward of $25,000 for the capture of the nameless swindler within American jurisdiction, and three or four lively Minnesotians undertook to deliver him. They went to Manitowish in a wagon, kidnapped the importer and fled with him tied hand and foot, but they were all captured on the frontier and held as prisoners. The adventure, however, and the diplomatic row growing out of it, advertised him pretty extensively, and the Edinburgh authorities obtained an order for his delivery to them. The polished knave saw the officers coming and shot himself through the head. I believe Jay Gould never got any of his money back. It is about the only time he was ever taken in.

Tom Pepper's Tribute to Artemus Ward.

[Virginia (N.Y.) Enterprise.]

Tom Pepper, who is known as the peerless prevaricator of Nevada, led a Bohemian life here years ago. One day, hearing of Artemus Ward's arrival at the International hotel, in treacherous haste he rushed away to interview the greatest humorist. He ran at once to Ward's room and, knocking, was instantly admitted.

"Artemus Ward, I believe!"

Artemus signified that the guest was a good one.

"I am delighted to meet you," cried Tom—"delighted to meet you, sir."

"And I have the pleasure of seeing!" and the smiling Ward looked a whole line of interrogation points.

"I am—I am—that is my name is," gasped Tom—"my name is. Well, just wait a moment till I think," and Tom ran out of the room and closed the door behind him, leaving Artemus standing in the middle of the floor.

After a few moments in the hall Tom rushed back toward the astonished Ward with extended hand and glowing face, crying: "Pepper, Pepper, sir! I'm Mr. Pepper—Tom Pepper—better known as Lyng Tom Pepper."

Kingston—Ward's agent—was out at the moment. Thinking he had an insane man to deal with, Artemus smiled the most cheerful smile then at his command. He declared he had often heard of Mr. Pepper, and was delighted to meet him. At the moment he was about to change his society would Mr. Pepper be kind enough to withdraw and call around again in half an hour. Mr. Pepper would and did.

When Mr. Kingston came in Artemus had a fearful story to tell about his adventure with a crazy man. Afterward, when Ward came to take a sense of his greatness as a humorist had so overcome poor Tom as to cause him to forget his name, the genial lecturer declared it was the greatest compliment that had ever been paid him.

Drumming Out Deserters.

[New York Cor. Kansas City Journal.]

I was in Dr. William A. Hammond's office the other day, and I asked him about old army time. "You know I was in the regular army thirty-five years," he said. "At this time the certainty is common in the army, I am told, but then it was followed by condign punishment. A deserter was ordered to receive fifty lashes on the bare back, well laid on, to be inflicted by the left flank with the letter D, to forfeit all pay and all wages due, to have his head shaved and to be drummed out of the service ignominiously. The drumming out I remember as a curious ceremony. The offender was placed between two platoons of soldiers, the whole band charged bayonets and those in front with arms reversed and bayonets pointed close to his person. The procession, headed by a drum and fife playing the Rouser's March, paraded around the garrison and finally escorted the prisoner beyond the limits of the post. The soldiers had set some words to the air, and they generally shouted it after the culprit, as he wheeled about, he sometimes joining in."

"The old thing about it was that as the squad sent the deserter over the lines, flogged, branded, disgraced, half naked and very uncomfortable, there was almost always a woman waiting for him in the bushes—waiting to pour oil on his wounds and fetch him a coat from her wardrobe, and then to lead him from the fort at a drumming-out, and wonder where the woman was coming from. Presently she would arise by the side of the path, give him a hug, and they would move off together. It emphasized the old notion, which has sometimes been denied, that every Jack has his Jill. By the by, I am going to put the music of the Rouser's March into one of my books, and I've had to chase all over town before I could find it. Let us hope it isn't needed as much as it used to be."

Becomes Awful.

[Courier-Journal.]

The duke of Connaught has the hay fever so bad that he is to be kept in a hotel. The fever is bad enough on persons of great intellect, but when it attacks royalty, the situation becomes simply awful.

For the Name Reason.

"Sam, you are not honest. Why do you put all the good patches on the top of the measure and the little ones below?" "Cause reason, dat, dat makes de front of your house all marble, and de back gate chiseled out."
